

I think that restricting the ability to record HDTV from Over The Air sources would be a mistake in pushing forward the rapid adoption of HDTV. I see no reason why this should even be an issue as current standards allow people to record shows that are broadcast. The only thing that has changed is the quality and this should NOT be enough to warrant new restrictions. The only thing that will be gained if recording is crippled is the creation of a black market for equipment that is not affected by broadcast flags. It would also make criminals out of people who simply wish to record something which they could legally watch but not legally record for later viewing.
